THE '10 CORVETTE FEVER VETTE ROD

SOURCE GUIDE

THE ULTIMATE
PURCHASING COMPANION
FOR THE VETTE ROD
ENTHUSIAST

ANOTHER year has passed and it's time to present our annual Vette Rod Source Guide. WOW . . . has it been another year already? Where has all that time gone? As the country has fallen further into a recession, a few companies that we listed last year are no longer around. But the great news is that 95 percent of the companies are still in the game! The Vette Rod market in general has leveled off a bit but it hasn't bottomed out like much of the rest of the automotive industry.

As we stated last year, the Vette Rod enthusiasts game hasn't changed all that much. It seems that people are still deciding to build or buy their own custom version of America's only sports car instead of restoring their Corvette back to original specs. Many owners are still telling us that they're tired of the hassles involved in judging, and now they just want a Vette they can drive and have fun with. Some people have decided to convert their current restored cars by "bagging and tagging" their original parts and sliding over to the more fun Vette Rod side as our own Jeff Bernhardt spelled out in his "Reconsidering Your Line in the Sand" series.

As we mention each year, before you go buying a new turnkey Vette Rod, make sure to spend some time behind the wheel of each builder's offering before making a choice, and note what differences exist between each car. Without a doubt, you will discover how fun it is to drive these Corvettes. If you decide to build your own car, make sure you explore all the parts that can be used to build your next project. You should also talk to current owners to see what and why they used specific products in their own vehicles.

As in earlier years, our Vette Rod Source Guide contains the most current names, specialty companies, and contacts of this ever-growing segment of the Corvette hobby. It not only contains those companies offering turnkey cars and complete chassis, but also those selling individual component pieces for building that chassis to your specific application. Please include "Dept. CF Vette Rod" on all written inquiries to these companies or make sure to mention you saw them in the CF Vette Rod Source Guide when calling them.
